Economic Commentary

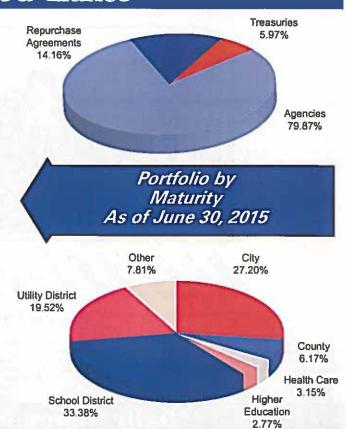

The second guarter carried on the eventful nature of 2015. Despite ongoing concerns over Greece's possible exit from the Eurozone, a stock market bubble in China, a softer US economy, illiquidity in fixed income markets, and geopolitics, risk assets have largely dismissed all the these negatives. Unsurprisingly, fixed income markets haven't fared as well, with the Barclays Global Aggregate falling 1.2% in the last quarter. The US economy appears to have bounced out of the first quarter's growth pothole and consensus forecasts are for growth of 2.5% in the second quarter. The rebound in growth is being once again driven by the US consumer. Savings rates were outpacing spending rates in the first quarter, but this trend has gone into reverse and nominal consumer spending increased by 0.9% in May, the highest level since August 2009. The housing market is showing signs of a pick-up, with new and existing home sales rising, as are housing starts. The pick up in Treasury yields may not slow the pace of growth in home sales as much as feared. However, mortgage approvals are rising again and higher wage growth and consumer confidence should support this segment of the economy. The employment cost index shows that private wage growth accelerated to 2.7% year-on-year in the first quarter as the labor market tightened, a trend which should continue. All of this data points to an increasingly likely first rate hike by the US Federal Reserve (the Fed) before year end. The Federal Open Market Committee (FOMC) met twice in the second quarter. In April, they expressed some concern about the growth slowdown following the weak first quarter, though they communicated that they believed much of the weakness was transitory. They expressed a more optimistic tone in June as most participants still expect lift-off before the end of the year.

While some of the FOMC's recent signals were somewhat dovish, it is expected that economic data over the coming months will support a move towards normalization beginning with a September hike. None-the-less, the Fed is trying to minimize market disruption as much as possible by stressing its expectation of a shallow path towards higher rates. It may be hard for the Fed to move too quickly as higher rates will cause the dollar to strengthen, restricting the Fed's ability to get back to a neutral level. Consistent with Chair Yellen's guidance, it is anticipated the Fed will move towards a 1.75% level by the end of 2016, but a parat that point to assess the market impact is highly likely. The U.S. yield curve typically flattens as tightening cycles evolve \(\) it is expected that this time will be no different. In addition, higher rates should spur long duration demand from pensions and insurance companies, effectively muting a move higher and contributing to a flatter yield curve.
